These 6 U.S. streets will become scenic pedestrian zones in 2026

Half a dozen U.S. cities will permanently reduce or remove car traffic on some of their streets. 2026 will be a good year for people who love to walk where cars once drove. As climate change accelerates—and cities continue to grapple with congestion and air pollution—urban priorities have been shifting. In May this year, Parisians voted to close 500 streets to traffic across all 20 arrondissements. London is moving forward with plans to pedestrianize sections of the world-famous Oxford Street,
